*Sri S. D. KOTHAVALA (Chikodi).—Mr. Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the demands made on behalf of the Government for Industries and other items. While doing so, I want to bring to the notice of this House and the Government certain accepted principles and policies which govern the development of the State and the entire nation. The accepted principles are that the industries should be decentralised and that there should be a sort of dispersal of industries, particularly in the rural areas. It is further stated that the gap between undeveloped and developed areas should be bridged as also the gap between the rural and urban areas. It is an accepted policy not only in India but in every nation that for the purpose of development the entire nation is taken as a unit. Industries have to be started wherever resources are available and also wherever raw materials and other conditions congenial to the development of industries are available. The other principle is that all regions must be developed because any region which remains undeveloped becomes a sort of sickly arm of the body politic and a drag on the entire nation. It has been our complaint that some States in South India have not been paid equal attention by the Central Government as some States in North India. Of course, with what justification one could say this, is everybody's guess. I think on many occasions the Hon'ble members of this House have stated that industries which should have been started in Mysore State have not been set up but they are given to other areas. We should of course try to get more industries for this State. We urged for inclusion in the core of the Plan our Sharavathy Project and of course the first two Stages are to be completed by December 1962. That is how we proceed. This principle which governs the States inter se the whole of India, governs the State and its component parts. Therefore,
